

“The men and women of Gulf Coast Health Care are working hard on the front lines of this pandemic to care for the most fragile members of our communities. We are relieved by the announcement of much-needed support from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services for additional testing capacity and additional resources for our heroic staff as we continue to work around the clock delivering quality health care services to our residents while working to mitigate risks from COVID. We are gratified that the federal government and our governors and state legislators recognize that the long-term care industry is a critical component of our nation’s healthcare system.”

-- Brett Barnett, President of Gulf Coast Health Care.
